INTERIM REPORT ON GROUND WATER CONTAMINATION: ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION AGENCY OVERSIGHT

SEPTEMBER 30, 1980.—Committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union and ordered to be printed

Mr. BROOKS, from the Committee on Government Operations, submitted the following

TWENTY-FIFTH REPORT

BASED ON A STUDY BY THE ENVIRONMENT, ENERGY, AND NATURAL RESOURCES SUBCOMMITTEE

On September 23, 1980, the Committee on Government Operations approved and adopted a report entitled "Interim Report on Ground Water Contamination: Environmental Protection Agency Oversight." The chairman was directed to transmit a copy to the Speaker of the House.

I. INTRODUCTION

> I come before you today with the distressing news that one of this Nation's most vast and vital natural resources [ground water] is in serious jeopardy.—Eckardt C. Beck, Assistant Administrator, Water and Hazardous Materials, Environmental Protection Agency, in testimony before Environment, Energy, and Natural Resources Subcommittee, July 25, 1980.[1]

Ground water is one of America's most valuable and plentiful natural resources. This water, which lies unseen beneath the earth's surface, is used every day by over 100 million Americans. We drink, bathe in, grow and cook our food with this liquid. It is absolutely essential to life and our agricultural and economic sustenance.

[1] Prepared Statement of Eckhardt Beck at p. 1, in Hearings, Environment, Energy, and Natural Resources Subcommittee of the Committee on Government Operations, "Toxic Chemical Contamination of Ground Water: Environmental Protection Agency Oversight," July 24 and 25, 1980 [hereinafter cited as Hearings].

Nationwide, about 36 quadrillion[2] gallons of ground water—30 times as much as is contained in all United States rivers and lakes combined—are within one-half mile of the earth's surface. Of that enormous reservoir over 30 trillion gallons are withdrawn every year to serve the varying needs of all Americans.[3]

More importantly, America is becoming increasingly dependent on ground water. The Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) estimates that ground water withdrawals for all uses are growing at a rate of 25 percent a decade. Agricultural use of ground water for irrigation increased 170 percent between 1950 and 1975.[4] Today over 41 percent of all water used for irrigation comes from below the surface of the ground. Fresh, clean ground water is a necessary raw material for the production of fruits, vegetables and grains.

This preliminary report focuses on one of the largest threats to ground water—industrial waste impoundments,[4a] pits, ponds, and lagoons. The Subcommittee intends, in subsequent reports and hearings to address more fully the impact of other contamination sources and activities on ground water including: landfills, application of pesticides and fertilizers, mining and petroleum exploration activities, underground storage tanks, and septic tank cleaners. While this report is by no means the Committee's final report on this subject, it is offered as an initial review of the magnitude and nature of the problem.

II. THE GROUND WATER CONTAMINATION PROBLEM

Public water supplies are highly dependent on ground water. According to a survey conducted by the U.S. Geological Survey (U.S.G.S.) in 1975, 50 percent or more of those served by public water supplies in 16 states obtained their water from underground. In 35 states, over 30 percent of the population using public supplies were drinking ground water.[5]

Ground water use varies throughout the country, but rural areas, often just a few miles from major cities, are especially dependent on it. Over 95 percent of all rural Americans obtain their water from wells.[6] Tens of millions of private well owners have no other source of fresh water since no public water supply is available. This dependence too is growing.[7]

But just at the time our reliance on ground water resources for pure drinking water and other vital economic activities is increasing, so is its contamination—and at a distressing rate. Clean ground water—still bountiful in many areas—is seriously threatened by overuse, indiscriminate dumping of hazardous wastes, improper disposal in unlined pits, ponds, and lagoons, and the use of toxic degreasing agents in septic tanks.

In 25 states many private and public water supply wells have been capped as a result of contamination. Last year alone, more than 300 contamination incidents were reported.[8] This situation has become critical in several states, most notably those where industrialization has been the heaviest.

Toxic chemical contamination of ground water supplies in several areas of the country has reached alarming proportions. Over 200 wells in California have been contaminated by toxic wastes. In Jackson Township, N.J., 100 drinking water wells have been closed as a result of contamination from a local landfill. On Long Island, N.Y., where 100 percent of the population is dependent on ground water, 36 public water supplies and dozens of private wells have been closed because of synthetic organic chemical contamination. The water supplies for nearly 2 million Long Island residents have been affected.[9] In the State of Massachusetts "at least one-third of the Commonwealth's communities have been affected to some degree by chemical contamination." [10] More than 16 municipal wells have been closed in the past few years as a result. In Michigan, officials have been faced with a "virtual explosion" in the discovery of ground water contamination problems; in 1979, 268 sites were identified as being already contaminated, and 381 additional sites were classified as "suspect" contamination areas.[11]

That contamination trend is increasing and has led Eckardt C. Beck, EPA's Assistant Administrator for Water and Waste Management, to predict that "as the weeks and the months and the years go on, we are going to hear of thousands of other incidents." [12]

The Committee considers the growing problem of ground water destruction one of the most serious environmental problems of the 1980's. Scientists have recently learned that many manmade and naturally occurring toxic materials which are dumped into the ground do not break down but are stored and eventually transported under the subsurface to areas where they may poison drinking water wells, and eventually, lakes and streams. Because of the slow movement of ground water, this pollution can remain undetected for decades. That has led to the erroneous and shortsighted belief that the ground is a bottomless sponge, which could soak up any material poured into it, clean it, and store if for future use. That costly misperception has now been proven wrong.[13]

The Federal effort to control ground water pollution will be more carefully reviewed in future Committee reports. To date the Federal effort has been haphazard and ineffective, despite numerous Federal statutes already on the books allowing EPA to take additional action to protect this vital resource. As Representative Peter H. Kostmayer

(D-Pa.) pointed out at the subcommittee's hearings, EPA has not fully tested those powers.[14]

The committee is hopeful that this report and its investigation will help focus public attention on this largely ignored problem before additional harm renders many more ground water supplies unusable. Once ground water is contaminated, it is extremely expensive and in some cases impossible to clean up. Moreover, some contaminants may remain in the ground water, thereby rendering it unusable, "for hundreds or thousands of years, if not for geologic time." [15] As Representative Andrew Maguire (D-N.J.) stated at the Subcommittee's July 25, 1980 hearing it would be a "terrible shame if we got to the point in this country where people cannot expect to be safe and healthy drinking the water that comes ito their homes." [16]

EPA has recently, in cooperation with the states, begun an expanded effort to develop a natural ground water policy designed to improve our protection of ground water. The Committee applauds this effort and strongly urges EPA to move swiftly to finalize a national ground water policy.

Federal programs designed to protect ground water have been placed on the back burner too long. At the Subcommittee's July 25 hearing, EPA Assistant Administrator Beck described the Federal government's failure to address this problem as "the most grievous error in judgment we as a Nation have ever made." [17] Now, not later, is the time to reverse the insidious trend toward destruction of our precious ground water.

III. BACKGROUND: CHARACTERISTICS OF GROUND WATER

Ground water is water that exists beneath the surface of the ground, as distinguished from surface lakes and streams of water. It collects in formations called aquifers [a layer of rock, sand, or gravel retaining significant quantities of subsurface water] and flows at variable rates in identifiable patterns. Unlike rivers and streams, ground water flows extremely slowly—from a few feet a day to a few feet a decade. It may move vertically as well as horizontally. Gravity, hydraulic pressure from other wells, and the composition of the subsurface strata have a great effect on its movement. Depending on the soil composition of the area, ground water may be found from a few feet below the surface to several hundred or even 1,000 feet below.

[14] Congress has provided EPA with the following statutory authorities which can be used to protect ground water: the Clean Water Act, 33 U.S.C. § 1251; the Safe Drinking Water Act (SDWA), in particular the Underground Injection Control Program, 42 U.S.C. §§ 300f, 300h–1 to 3 (1976), the Gonzales Amendments (the sole-source aquifier provision) in Section 1424(e), 42 U.S.C. § 300h–3(e), and the primary drinking water standards, 42 U.S.C. § 300g–1, the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act of 1976 (RCRA), 42 U.S.C. §§ 6901–6987 (1976), including regulation of solid waste disposal facilities under Subtitle D and hazardous waste discharges into ground water under Subtitle C; the Toxic Substances Control Act (TSCA), 15 U.S.C. §§ 2601–2629 (1976).

EPA has, on occasion, used one or more of these authorities in an effort to protect ground water supplies. However, the exercise of these powers has been extremely limited. One explanation for EPA's failure to test more fully its statutory authorities lies in the fact that it has not established an internal ground water contamination strategy. As Assistant Administrator Beck noted at the Subcommittee hearings, "the primary focus of our [EPA's] authorities heretofore have been on surface water." (Hearings, July 25, at p. 11). This focus has resulted, Beck noted, in "a kind of serendipity system today for hearing about" ground water problems. (Hearings, July 25, at p. 7).

A full review of the advantages and disadvantages of utilizing those statutory authorities enumerated above can only be adequately addressed once all the Subcommittee's hearings on ground water regulation are complete. The time and space limits of this interim report do not allow for this review. The Subcommittee's final report on ground water will, however, fully address this issue.

[15] Harris prepared statement, July 24, at p. 5.

[16] Hearings, July 25 at p. 59.

[17] Ibid.

Surface waters and ground water usually are directly connected underground. Ground water flows into rivers and streams through springs. Surface waters at the same time "recharge"—or replenish—ground water sources. Recharge areas such as river beds and marshes are a major source of ground water supplies. The nexus between surface and ground water allows the contamination of one source to contaminate the other.

Ground water contamination may be caused by a variety of sources and activities including pits, ponds, and lagoons; industrial landfills; storage tanks; road de-icing salts; and septic tanks. (As discussed earlier, this report will focus on contamination by industrial pits, ponds, and lagoons.) See Appendix A for a graphic illustration of the impact of waste disposal and other activities on ground water.

Ground water contamination can result when liquids in surface water impoundments leach (seep) into the ground in an area lacking impermeable underground strata between the liquid and the ground water which would bar the downward movement of the liquid. Industrial waste, for example, dumped in an unlined lagoon on top of soil underlain with a layer of thick clay, would probably not allow most wastes to leach into the ground water below. However, the same wastes placed in an unlined lagoon atop sandy soil would leach readily into the ground water below.

IV. SUBCOMMITTEE INVESTIGATION OF INDUSTRIAL SURFACE WATER IMPOUNDMENTS

EPA has estimated that 50 billion gallons of liquid waste per day are placed in industrial surface water impoundments throughout the country.[18] This enormous volume of often toxic material has been the focus of the first phase of the Subcommittee's investigation into Federal regulation of ground water.

Early in its review, the Subcommittee learned that in 1978, under the authority of the Safe Drinking Water Act[19] [Section 1442(b)(3)(c)], EPA provided states with $5 million to study the "magnitude and potential effects of waste disposal or ground water."[20] This study, known as the "Surface Impoundment Assessment" (SIA), was designed to locate impoundments containing liquid wastes and assess their potential impact on ground water. The Subcommittee requested that EPA provide it with a full report on this survey.

That report indicated that over 170,000 waste impoundments are located throughout the country.[20a] A summary table of these impoundments broken down by use categories of Industrial, Municipal, Agricultural, Mining, Oil and Gas Brine Pits, and others may be found on the following pages. Maps showing where these sites are concentrated nationally begin on the next page.

[20] Lyle R. Silka and Francoise M. Brasier, National Assessment of Ground Water Contamination Potential of Waste Impoundments EPA, June 1980, at p. 1.

[20a] Excluded from the survey were: farm ponds, storage tanks, ponds related to sand and gravel operations, swimming pools, natural lakes and fresh water ponds, furrow irrigation fields, irrigation reuse pits, sediment control basins, well drilling mud pits and emergency pits, domestic sewage systems, any water or waste water treatment facility or unit process containment characteristically constructed of steel or concrete.

The survey also found with regard to the 26,000 industrial sites located that:

> 35 percent, or about 9,100, of the total impoundments are unlined, which potentially allow contaminants to infiltrate unimpeded into the subsurface;
> 30 percent, or 7,800 of those unlined impoundments are sitting directly on top of ground water sources with no barrier reported between the wastes and the ground water;
> more than 750 sites, or about 2,600 of the total impoundments, are unlined, sitting directly on top of ground water and are within one mile of a water supply well.[21]

A table showing the breakdown of the number of sites per state in the above categories is included in Appendix C.

In an effort to learn more about these potential threats to ground water, on July 3, 1980, Representative Toby Moffett (D-Conn.), Chairman of the Subcommittee, requested that EPA provide a list indicating the names, locations, and owners of 8,163 industrial waste impoundments on which the EPA had made further assessments. (See correspondence in appendix B.)

SUMMARY STATISTICS FOR LOCATED WASTE IMPOUNDMENT SITES

Category	Located sites	Assessed sites	Located impoundments
Industrial	10,819	8,163	25,749
Municipal	19,102	10,792	36,161
Agricultural	14,373	6,562	18,765
Mining:
Noncoal	1,688	616	4,026
Coal	[1] 5,388	837	20,350
Oil and gas brine pits	[1] 24,527	3,314	64,951
Other	1,781	680	6,645
Total	77,678	30,964	176,647

[1] SIA sites numbers for the mining and oil and gas brine pit sites are not necessarily related to actual ownership and should not be referred to as the actual number of legal sites. The number of located impoundments would be a close approximation for these two categories.

EPA Administrator Douglas Costle released the information to the Subcommittee with the following caveats: The information, provided by the states and not the owners of the sites, was collected only to provide a "first round approximation" of the magnitude of the problem; the data did not provide conclusive data on specific sites; the information sources were often secondhand.

At the July 24 hearing, Subcommittee Chairman Moffett introduced into the record a list of 750 sites identified by EPA as containing one or more unlined pits, ponds, and lagoons located within one mile of a water supply well and sitting on top of ground water aquifers, with no confining strata between the liquid and the ground water. In releasing this information, Chairman Moffett said,

> I want to emphasize that this Subcommittee has made no judgments as to the accuracy of this information provided. We also are not saying that these companies have broken any law or poisoned anyone's well." [22]

While the survey was not designed to provide detailed information on any particular site, EPA found that over 90 percent of the industrial pits, ponds, and lagoons were "virtually unmonitored." [23] In a colloquy which took place at the Subcommittee's July 25 hearing, Assistant Administrator Beck explained the significance of that finding:

> Mr. MOFFETT. One category of sites included in the industrial surface impoundment survey that really didn't come up yesterday was the sites which are, so to speak, "virtually unmonitored." According to your study, over 90 percent of the impoundments surveyed, or about 23,400 of the total impoundments, are in this category. Aren't you saying that the owners and operators of the 23,000-plus impoundments really > don't know whether they are contaminating the ground water, and if they haven't done any monitoring, how in the world can we be sure that some of those waste liquids are not leaking into the ground water?

> Mr. BECK. That is what I am saying.
> Mr. MOFFETT. We can't be sure?
> Mr. BECK. We cannot be sure.[24]

The importance of these data was emphasized again in a colloquy between Subcommittee Chairman Moffett and Dr. Robert Harris, Member of the Council on Environmental Quality.

> Mr. MOFFETT. Although we can't say that these sites are poisoning our drinking water, Dr. Harris, would it be fair to say they pose a significant threat to ground water?
> Dr. HARRIS. I would say that would be a fair statement. I am aware of this data. It is shocking data. Certainly from what I have seen of these sites that I have visited—and I have not visited very many, but the few I have visited—they are affecting ground water quality and they could, I think, pose a potentially serious threat to ground water supplies.[25]

Assistant Administrator Beck noted that most unlined industrial impoundments ". . . have contaminants in there that presently have no way of guaranteeing that they won't leach into the ground." He added, "It means that these sites do not have the integrity to contain the contaminants which are in there." [26]

In a colloquy with Representative Mike Synar (D-Okla.) Mr. Beck emphasized the overall significance of these data.

> Mr. SYNAR. In your opinion, do you believe this study shows that there are thousands of bottomless lagoons which may pose a threat to ground water?
> Mr. BECK. I think that this survey indicates that we have got a very, very serious problem with lagoons contaminating ground water, yes.[27]

V. CONCLUSION

The Committee concludes that:

(1) This nation is highly dependent on ground water.

(2) Ground water destruction will be one of the most serious environmental problems of the 1980s.

(3) The health of millions of Americans is threatened by government and industry's past failure to properly protect our ground water.

(4) The destruction of our nation's ground water will continue unless we move immediately to locate all potential sources of ground water contamination and take action to block the further flow of toxic substances into the ground.

[24] Ibid., July 25, at p. 34.
[25] Ibid., July 24, at p. 26.
[26] Ibid., July 25, at pp. 8–9.
[27] Ibid., July 25, at p. 16.

(5) We can expect hundreds of more cases of ground water contamination to be discovered as a result of our past failure to protect our ground water. Some cases will have been caused by disposal of toxic substances that took place decades ago.

(6) In many areas, cases of contamination may have resulted in irreversible damage to ground water resources or rendered them unusable for decades or perhaps even for geologic time.

Failure to anticipate the potentially devastating effects disposal practices may have on ground water has been shared by government and industry. As a consequence both the public and private sectors of our nation must work together to rectify this situation, in an atmosphere of cooperation and not one of confrontation. As our national response to these facts develops, we must remember one fundamental fact: any threat to the nation's ground water is ultimately a threat to our citizen's health and livelihoods.

VI. RECOMMENDATIONS

The Committee recommends that:

(1) EPA continue vigorous cooperation with the states to enunciate as swiftly as possible a definitive national ground water policy. That policy must be designed to locate potential threats to ground water and eliminate them before precious ground water supplies are irreversibly damaged.

(2) EPA utilize its statutory authorities to the maximum extent feasible to protect our ground water resources.

(3) EPA report to the Congress on its progress toward protecting the nation's ground water. Toward that end, EPA should present within 120 days, a report to this Committee detailing what additional resources and statutory authorities, if any, are needed to protect the nation's ground water.

VII. KEY TO APPENDIXES

Appendix B includes correspondence between Chairman Moffett and Administrator Costle on EPA's Surface Impoundment Assessment.

Appendix C contains a list of over 2,100 sites as shown by EPA to contain at least one unlined impoundment located above a usable ground water source with no barrier reported between the wastes and the ground water. The asterisked sites also reportedly contain potentially hazardous contaminants. Those with two asterisks are reportedly within a mile of a potential water supply well. Those with three asterisks are in both categories.

In making this list public, the subcommittee again stresses that the EPA list is a first-round approximation and as such is not designed to provide reliable data on a site-specific basis. The subcommittee has made no conclusion concerning the accuracy of all the information gathered by EPA for each site. The subcommittee also stresses that it is not accusing the owners and/or operators of specific sites of polluting the ground water. The significance of this list lies in the considerable number of these sites and the fact that many of them may contain impoundments posing a significant contamination risk to ground water.

In order to obtain more specific information on the contamination potential of these sites the subcommittee has compiled a questionnaire for each company listed in Appendix C. The questionnaire is designed to obtain information on these sites directly from the companies who own or operate them.

The subcommittee will be sending the questionnaire to these companies this fall. The questionnaire results should be available this winter.

APPENDIX B

House of Representatives,
Environment, Energy, and Natural Resources
Subcommittee of the Committee on Government Operations,
July 3, 1980.

Hon. Douglas Costle,
Administrator, Environmental Protection Agency,
Washington, D.C.

Dear Mr. Costle: As you know, the Environment, Energy, and Natural Resources Subcommittee, as part of its ongoing oversight of the Environmental Protection Agency, is conducting an inquiry into Federal regulation of ground water. This letter follows up my June 16, 1980 letter to you concerning the "Surface Impoundment Assessment," the EPA effort to inventory existing surface disposal and treatment sites.

The Surface Impoundment Assessment results released by EPA to date indicate that a number of industrial waste and treatment impoundments may be endangering ground water aquifers in many areas throughout the country. More detailed information on the exact nature and extent of this danger to the Nation's ground and drinking waters is essential to the Subcommittee's inquiry.

I therefore request, pursuant to the authority vested in the Subcommittee by Clauses 2 and 4 of Rule X and Clause 1, Rule XI of the House of Representatives, that you provide the Subcommittee with a list indicating the name, location and owner of the waste impoundments in the following categories:

(a) All of the 8,163 sites assessed and any listings of those not assessed.

(b) Those sites which are "virtually unmonitored as to possible ground water contamination."

(c) Those impoundments which were found to be unlined.

(d) Those impoundments which contain liquid wastes that may be considered hazardous.

(e) Those impoundments which are "unlined. overlie usable aquifers, and are underlain by unsaturated zones which freely allow downward movement of any liquid wastes escaping from the impoundment."

(f) Those sites identified in (e) which are within a mile of a "water supply well which would be in the path of any contaminated ground water flowing from these industrial sites."

I have asked Lester Brown of the Subcommittee staff to work with your staff to arrange a satisfactory time and format for delivery of this information to the Subcommittee. He may be reached at 225–6427. Please have a member of your staff contact him by Tuesday, July 8, to make these arrangements.

Thank you for your cooperation.

Sincerely yours,

Toby Moffett, Chairman.

UNITED STATES ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION AGENCY,
Washington, D.C., July 21, 1980.

Hon. TOBY MOFFETT,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Environment, Energy and Natural Resources, Committee on Government Operations, U.S. House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: This is in response to your recent requests for information on the Surface Impoundment Assessment (SIA).

As you know, the SIA is one of the more successful examples of a cooperative effort between the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) and the States. So far, most of the work has been done by the States. This stage of the assessment will culminate in a series of State reports, each of which includes an inventory of the surface impoundments in the State, a first-round approximation of the contamination potential of a sample of those impoundments, a summary of the State's existing control program, and the State's recommendation for further action needed to control surface impoundments. To date, we have received the inventory data for all States; however, eleven State reports are in draft and four others have not yet been received.

Based on this information, EPA is preparing two national reports. The first of these will summarize and analyze the data presented by the States. We anticipate completing a draft of this report by September 13, 1980. The second report will contain recommendations and conclusions derived from the data. Neither report will be published before the end of the year since we think it is important to provide the States an opportunity to review both draft reports. In the meantime, we have enclosed the preliminary report to which you referred.

With respect to your request for the name, location, and owners of impoundments, that information is being delivered today under separate cover. While we are happy to provide the information we want you to be fully aware of the limitations of the SIA. It was intended to provide a first round approximation of the magnitude of the potential ground water problems associated with surface impoundments. It was never intended to provide information specific enough to lead to conclusions relative to specific sites and their practices. Moreover, the SIA was conducted with limited funds and as a result, much of the data came from permit files, responses to questionnaires, trade associations, industrial directories, and other, similar sources. The key point is that these sources are second hand and as a result of funding limitations little has been done in the way of field verification. The few attempts that have been made to verify the data have demonstrated that the inventory and assessment are not sufficiently precise to yield reliable data on a site-by-site basis. However, the SIA has been successful in achieving its stated goal: a first round approximation of the impact of surface impoundments on our nation's ground water. Further, the assessment is reliable and accurate when the data is presented in aggregates of sufficient magnitudes to afford statistical validity.

Another area that could cause confusion is the use of the term "potentially hazardous waste." The waste classification system used in the SIA is based on standard industrial classifications and was developed before the RCRA hazardous waste designation was formulated.

As a result, we feel that it is inaccurate to characterize the data as conclusive on a site-specific basis—a level of specificity that the SIA was neither designed nor intended to perform. Previous attempts to use similar data sources in this manner have resulted in the sources being discredited. We feel that the SIA is valuable when used as intended and, accordingly, do not want to see it discredited.

In summary, we are pleased to provide the information you requested for the Committee's use; but urge that its use beyond the Committee be closely controlled by you, and that the above caveats are clearly stated. We look forward to working with you on this important matter.

Sincerely yours,

Douglas M. Costle.

Enclosure.
